Hello,
As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

NO, I am not able to attend the EPD HEARING on Thursday, March 5th at 6 pm.

If I am not able to attend in person, I have included my question here:

Has EPD considered the lower costs of creating kWh by incentivizing energy conservation in buildings? According to a white paper about to be released by Southface (I can provide an advance copy if you email me for it), the cost per kWh via conservation is LESS than by building capacity.

Not only would there be a large environmental plus (avoided pollution) but retrofitting buildings would provide an economic stimulus and result in significant job creation.

Electricity is the primary source of energy for homes. Homes in the south have on average ten times the south facing walls and roofs necessary to provide 100% of the residential needs. Please spend these millions of dollars to reduce energy use through conservation and then provide the remaining energy needs with clean renewable sources. The power companys can lend the inital dollars to do this and make the money back through the energy savings. and whats better wwe won't need new power plants.

Hello,

I think that any well informed person, not associated with the coal industry, would agree that there is no such thing as clean coal. It is physically impossible to use coal for power generation without producing dangerous byproducts. And, hopefully, we all realize that it is in no way a renewable resource. As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

No, I am not able to attend the EPD HEARING on Thursday, March 5th at 6 pm. But, I have included my questions here:

Why would the EPD allow a new coal burning plant to be built when Federal money to support green energy initiatives is on its way to the states as we speak?

Based on the assumption that the Federal EPA will soon clarify the Clean Air Act with regards to Mercury and begin enforcing that act, why would the state of Georgia want to allow and extra 120 pounds of it sent into the air every year?

With a national cap and trade program for Carbon almost assured to be implimented within the next year, why would the state of Georgia want to add 6.2 million tons of CO2 to the air that someone will have to pay to mitigate eventually?

If the plant is permitted can it be on the condition that the owners will not pass along any future CO2 reduction costs to the consumers? Since we know ahead of time that these costs will show up eventually and that they wouldn't exist if the power was generated from solar, biomass, or conservation efforts, it only seems fair that we shouldn't be expexted to pay the extra costs associated with a less efficient form of power generation.

Thank you,

Why would you consider allowing another coal-fired plant during this time when it has been shown what environmental catastrophes can happen as a result. For example, the TVA plant in Tennessee that recently had an ash spill that has devastated the surrounding area. It's time for Georgia to move forward and be a leader in the clean industry movement. Help us as residents to be proud of where we are from and not feel like we are living in a state that is refusing to change with the current times and staying stuck in old technology, thoughts and developments.

Hello,
As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

I am unable to attend the EPD HEARING on Thursday, March 5th at 6 pm but have included my questions here:

With so many regions of Georgia either failing or coming close to nonattainment of the EPA Clean Air Act standards, is it prudent to permit a facility that will emit additional tons of regulated air pollutants each year?

Georgia is well-poised to utilize clean forms of energy such as solar power and off-shore wind turbines. Is now the time in our state's history to construct old dirty energy technology when other promising clean technologies exist?

I encourage EDP to develop a more forward-thinking approach when permitting new power industry facilities by considering the future environmental impacts of clean, versus polluting technologies. You should reward clean technologies and discourage dirty ones.

Atlanta already spends May-August so covered in smog that it is not safe to go outside and we are running out of adequate fresh water. It is a shame that Georgia has some of the dirtiest power in the country and the world. And now you want us to worsen our air quality and use 16,000,000 gallons of fresh water a day to do it. How is this plan feasible to those of us who live here? How can our children with asthma continue to thrive in this city? Why can't we invest money in demand reduction, energy efficiency, and renewables?

Subject: NO COAL: Georgia needs a smart energy future!

Dear Mr. Glynn,

As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

Moreover, the water needed for this plant in this location could exceed surface supplies and result in pumps lowering the water table in this region.

What about comprehensive programs of conservation and insulation of homes and businesses? Are there any? What about encouraging alternative sources of energy - solar panels on homes and businesses?

Sincerely,

Sven Lovegren

Everyone in Georgia will be negatively impacted by the pollution from this proposed coal plant. We also can't afford to waste the water that will be needed for this coal plant. We have the opportunity to start Georgia on a new path towards clean and renewable energy.

My question is: Will you please consider the real cost to our children's health and the environment and deny this new permit?

As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

I am not able to attend in person and I have included my questions here:

With our current knowledge of how dirty coal is and how inefficient it is as an energy source- along with our safe, clean energy alternatives, why is this new coal plant even being considered?

Also, with consumers taking so much action to curb energy waste and energy consumption at home and in the workplace, isn't it time for energy companies and governments to start doing their fair share?

Hello,

I understand that the EPD will be asked about a new coal fired power plant, "plant Washington", for middle Georgia. Coal is plentiful and cheap, but only when we neglect the long term costs of the pollution and other environmental impacts of coal.

Before you approve this plant, you must demand that conservation and more efficient use of existing power supplies are implemented; that all feasible cleaner forms of energy have first been exhausted (natural gas, nuclear, wind/solar); and even then, if another coal fired power plant is the right thing to do, that it is done in the right way: with only the newest, cleanest technology available, and with environmental impacts of the plant design, construction, operation, and fuel sources assured under law.

Thank you for ensuring that our energy needs are met in clean, sustainable, practical ways.

After the spill of fly ash from coal in Tennessee I can't believe we are even considering building another coal-fired plant. There is no such thing as "clean coal." Burning it puts particles into the air in addition to carbon dioxide. These particles get into our lungs and cause cancer. It uses scarce water. It is dangerous to pile up fly ash as we should know by now.

We should encourage conservation and efficiency in our construction methods, and encourage the use of renewables for energy. We have enough sun to provide electricity through solar panels.

Building another coal-fired plant is playing with fire!

Hello,

As coal is a dirty, outdated and risky investment, I request that EPD deny the permit to build Plant Washington.

YES, I am able to attend the EPD HEARING on Thursday, March 5th at 6 pm.
